

Lighthorne 1600 – 1678 Parish Register (WCRO DR18/1 - DR18/6)
Produced with the permission of the Warwickshire County Record Office

Transcription by Colin Such (2022)

Introduction and Explanation

The Lighthorne parish register dates from 1538 and it appears to be a series of parchment and vellum pages, which have at various dates been bound together in book form. The pages are not numbered and I have adopted a sequential numbering system to aid indexing the names. I have not seen the original register and my transcriptions are based on scans of the original pages displayed by ancestry.co.uk. I have so far transcribed the register from 1538 to 1678 and split it into 2 sections: 1538-1602 (LH170.1) and this section, 1600-1678 (LH171.1). From the end of the 18th century notebooks were used for day to day recording of events, which were then transposed onto ledger pages. Ledger pages bearing a printed grid were in use from 1813.

Below is a table of the contents of the 1600-1678 register.

It appears to contain relatively complete records of baptisms, marriages and burials in St Laurence's Church. They are largely written in Secretary Script, in Latin in the 16th century and in a mixture of Latin and English in the first half of the 17th century and mainly in English thereafter. Latin words and phrases, where not obvious, have translations in square brackets. Few people were literate in the 16th and 17th centuries and spelling was not uniform. Surnames were often written phonetically, with variations in spelling, even in the same entry. First names were often written in their Latin form, suitably declined. These have been transcribed as written, but the index records only the equivalent English names. Page content and line length of the transcription reflect that of the original register. Dubious transcriptions are indicated with square brackets and a question mark. Illegible words are indicated by dots within square brackets and missing or illegible passages are indicated by a row of dots. Words which have been abbreviated in the manuscript have been extended, with the inserted letters in italics, as in 'Thomas'. Words or passages in the register which appear to be a later insertion are indicated between pointed brackets thus <insertion>. Transcriber's notes appear in blue, within square brackets.

The Julian calendar was in use in England until 1752 with the year ending on 24th March and the new year starting on 25th March. The Gregorian calendar, with the year ending on 31st December, was introduced in Europe in 1582, but was not officially used in England until 1752, in which year 2nd September was followed by 14th September in order to accommodate the change. However some vicars used the Gregorian calendar before 1752 and thus it is necessary to know which calendar is being used for dates recorded between 1st January and 24th March. Where it is obvious which calendar is being used, by the sequential nature of the entries, the date is recorded thus: 23 januarij 1628 [1629], meaning that 1628 is the date recorded in the register, but in today's Gregorian calendar we would know it as 1629. Where the choice of calendar is uncertain a question mark is used.

Index of names in the 1600 - 1678 register

Where a name occurs more than once on a page, only one page reference is listed.
Names written in their Latin forms are included in this index in their normal English forms.

[It is not clear whether the scribe was using the Julian or Gregorian calendar for these burials in 1600, 1601 and 1602. Those recorded in 1612 and later are in a different hand and as the dates recorded under each year postdate 25 March of that year and continue beyond 31 December to 24 March, it is assumed that the Julian calendar was in use and the Gregorian date, which we use today, is given in square brackets.]
